Specifically, it was noted that gambling operators sometimes use social casino games to advertise gambling activities without legal restrictions because it is a game.

Providing further support that frequent wins and perception of skills as a process by which social casino games to lead to online gambling, Hollingshead et al. According to Blaszczynski and Nower's (2002) pathways model of problem and pathological gambling, there are three distinct subgroups of gamblers, each with different pathways that manifest in problem gambling behaviors.

In the model, the starting point is ecological factors, which include increased availability and accessibility.

This pathway includes cognitive mechanisms such as irrational beliefs and illusion of control, which may manifest due to the inflated payout rates on social casino games.

Thus, the current study cannot speak to social casino games being a deterrent t
