Now, after countless hours of legislative study and debate, the measure has become law.

"I first proposed Vermont legalize sports betting several years ago and I'm happy the Legislature has come to an agreement, as well," Scott said in a written statement Wednesday afternoon.

The legislation permits up to six companies - potentially household names such as DraftKings and FanDuel - to operate mobile sports betting platforms in Vermont.

Proponents of legalization argued that, in the digital age, Vermonters are already gambling illegally in online circles - a black market of sorts that left them vulnerable to exploitation or scams.

In response, lawmakers included in H.

127 a "limit" on platforms' ability to advertise to Vermonters under 21 years-old, who, legally, are barred from sports wagering.
