The standard 52-card pack is used, but in most casinos several decks of cards are shuffled together.

Before the deal begins, each player places a bet, in chips, in front of them in the designated area.

The dealer thoroughly shuffles portions of the pack until all the cards have been mixed and combined.

Another round of cards is then dealt face up to each player, but the dealer takes the second card face down.

Thus, each player except the dealer receives two cards face up, and the dealer receives one card face up and one card face down.

In the latter case, the player loses and the dealer collects the bet wagered.

With two fives, the player may split a pair, double down, or just play the hand in the regular way.

Generally, 2s, 3s, or 7s can be split unless the dealer has an 8, 9, ten-card, or ace.
